CLASSROOM INSTRUCTIONS
GROUP 1: LEAD IN

1. Settle down, everyone.
At the beginning of a B1-level lesson, students have just come back from break time. Some are still talking to their friends, laughing, and moving their chairs. The classroom is a bit noisy. The teacher stands at the front, waits for a moment, and then says:
“Settle down, everyone.”
The students gradually stop talking, face the front of the classroom, and prepare to begin the lesson.

2. Let’s get started.
After the class becomes quiet and students are seated properly, the teacher smiles and looks around to make sure everyone is ready. Then the teacher says:
“Let’s get started.”
Students take out their notebooks and pens, sit up straight, and focus their attention on the teacher.

3. How are you today?
Before introducing the lesson content, the teacher wants to create a friendly atmosphere. The teacher greets the class warmly and asks:
“How are you today?”
Several students respond with short answers such as “I’m fine” or “Good,” and the classroom feels more relaxed and comfortable.

4. Do you want to play a game?
To begin the lesson in an engaging way, the teacher plans a short warm-up activity. Instead of announcing it directly, the teacher looks at the class and asks:
“Do you want to play a game?”
Many students smile, nod, or say “Yes!”, showing excitement and interest in the activity.

GROUP 1: LEAD IN

5. Tell me some natural disasters in our country that you know.
To introduce the topic of Global Warming, the teacher wants to activate students' background knowledge. The teacher looks around the classroom and says:
"Tell me some natural disasters in our country that you know."
Students raise their hands and give answers such as floods, storms, droughts, and landslides.

6. Open your books to Unit 5.
After finishing the warm-up activity, the teacher transitions to the textbook. Holding the book, the teacher says:
"Open your books to Unit 5."
Students open their textbooks, turn to the correct page, and get ready to follow the lesson.

7. Today, we're going to study Unit 5, Global Warming.
When everyone has opened their books, the teacher introduces the lesson focus and says:
"Today, we're going to study Unit 5, Global Warming."
Students look at the unit title and prepare to learn about the new topic.

8. Look at the title of the unit.
To begin the lead-in activity, the teacher points to the top of the page and says:
"Look at the title of the unit."
Students shift their attention to the title and read it silently.

9. What do you think this unit is about?
After students read the title, the teacher encourages prediction and asks:
"What do you think this unit is about?"
Students think for a moment, then raise their hands and share their ideas about the topic.

GROUP 1: LEAD IN

10. Look at the pictures on page 52.

To continue the introduction, the teacher directs students' attention to the images in the textbook and says:

"Look at the pictures on page 52."

Students observe the pictures carefully and prepare to describe what they see or discuss them with their partners.

GROUP 2: GIVING INSTRUCTIONS FOR ACTIVITIES

1. I'll divide all of you into groups of three.
To prepare for a speaking activity, the teacher wants students to work collaboratively. The teacher looks around the classroom to check the number of students and says:
"I'll divide all of you into groups of three."
Students move their chairs, form small groups with their classmates, and get ready for the task.

2. Who volunteers to read out loud the tasks' requirements?
Before starting the activity, the teacher wants to make sure everyone understands the instructions. The teacher points at the exercise on the screen and asks:
"Who volunteers to read out loud the tasks' requirements?"
One student raises their hand and reads the instructions aloud while the others follow along in their books.

3. Read the text carefully and answer the questions below.
During a reading lesson, the teacher introduces a passage related to the unit topic. After giving students a few seconds to look at the text, the teacher says:
"Read the text carefully and answer the questions below."
Students begin reading silently and underline important information as they look for answers.

4. Listen carefully to the recording and take note.
In a listening activity, the teacher explains that students will hear a short recording only twice. Before playing the audio, the teacher reminds the class:
"Listen carefully to the recording and take note."
Students focus on the speakers, prepare their notebooks, and write down key information while listening.

GROUP 2: GIVING INSTRUCTIONS FOR ACTIVITIES

5. Read the questions first and underline key words.
Before playing the listening recording, the teacher wants students to be prepared. The teacher directs their attention to the worksheet and says:
“Read the questions first and underline key words.”
Students scan the questions and underline important words to help them listen for specific details.

6. Write your answers in your notebook.
After students finish discussing answers with their partners, the teacher wants them to record their final responses. The teacher says:
“Write your answers in your notebook.”
Students pick up their pens and carefully write down their answers.

7. Match the words with their meanings.
During a vocabulary activity, the teacher shows a list of new words and definitions on the board. The teacher explains the task and says:
“Match the words with their meanings.”
Students draw lines between the words and the correct definitions on their worksheets.

8. Complete the sentences using the words given.
In a grammar practice exercise, the teacher directs students to the next activity and says:
“Complete the sentences using the words given.”
Students read each sentence carefully and choose the appropriate word from the list to fill in the blanks.

9. Choose the correct answer.
For a multiple-choice activity, the teacher instructs the class by saying:
“Choose the correct answer.”
Students read the questions and circle the option they believe is correct.

GROUP 2: GIVING INSTRUCTIONS FOR ACTIVITIES

10. Tick the correct option.

At the end of the exercise, the teacher moves on to a short checking activity and says:

“Tick the correct option.”

Students look at the given statements and put a tick next to the option they think is right.

GROUP 3: MONITORING AND SUPPORTING

1. That's correct. Congratulations!
During a vocabulary checking activity, a student gives the correct answer confidently. The teacher smiles and responds:
"That's correct. Congratulations!"
The student feels encouraged and smiles, while other students become more motivated to participate.

2. Do you need any help?
While students are working in pairs on a reading task, the teacher walks around the classroom to monitor their progress. Noticing that one group seems confused, the teacher stops beside them and asks:
"Do you need any help?"
The students explain their difficulty, and the teacher provides clarification.

3. Have you all finished?
As students are completing a writing exercise individually, the teacher checks the time and observes that most students have stopped writing. The teacher looks around the room and asks:
"Have you all finished?"
Some students nod, while a few ask for one more minute to complete their work.

4. Keep going. Try another option.
A student is attempting to answer a difficult grammar question but gives an incorrect response. Instead of correcting immediately, the teacher encourages the student by saying:
"Keep going. Try another option."
The student thinks again and attempts a different answer.

GROUP 3: MONITORING AND SUPPORTING

5. You're doing well.
During a group discussion activity, the teacher listens to one group that is actively exchanging ideas in English. The teacher smiles and says:
"You're doing well."
The students feel more confident and continue their discussion enthusiastically.

6. Try to use English as much as possible.
While monitoring pair work, the teacher notices that some students are switching to their first language. The teacher gently reminds them:
"Try to use English as much as possible."
Students nod and continue the conversation in English.

7. Talk to your partner, please.
After asking a question, the teacher wants students to share their ideas before answering in front of the class. The teacher says:
"Talk to your partner, please."
Students turn to their partners and begin discussing their answers.

8. Tell me your answer, please.
After giving students time to think, the teacher calls on a student who has raised their hand and says:
"Tell me your answer, please."
The student responds, and the class listens carefully.

9. Do you want to listen one more time?
In a listening activity, some students look unsure about their answers. Before checking, the teacher asks:
"Do you want to listen one more time?"
Several students nod, and the teacher plays the recording again.

GROUP 3: MONITORING AND SUPPORTING

10. Think about the meaning, not just the words.
During a reading comprehension activity, a student focuses too much on translating word by word and struggles to understand the main idea. The teacher approaches and says:
“Think about the meaning, not just the words.”
The student rereads the sentence and tries to understand the overall message

GROUP 4: CHECKING & FEEDBACK

1. Okay everyone, time's up

In a B1-level class, the teacher asks students to work in pairs to discuss a debate topic for ten minutes. As the activity comes to an end, the teacher checks the time and realizes that the ten minutes have finished, although some groups are still talking. The teacher gently claps to get the students' attention and says: "Okay everyone… time's up."

The students then stop their discussion and shift their attention to the teacher to listen to the next instructions or feedback.

2. Let's check the answers together.

After students finish a grammar exercise individually, the teacher walks around to make sure most of them have completed the task. When the class becomes quiet and students put down their pens, the teacher says: "Alright everyone, let's check the answers together." Students then look at their worksheets and get ready to compare their answers with the teacher's feedback.

3. Who would like to answer?

After asking a comprehension question and giving students some time to think, the teacher avoids calling on a specific student immediately. Instead, the teacher looks around the classroom and says, "Who would like to answer?" to encourage voluntary participation and create a more student-centered interaction.

4. Can you speak your answer aloud?

When a student is speaking very softly during a class discussion and other students seem unable to hear clearly, the teacher leans slightly forward and gestures toward the class. The teacher then says: "Can you speak louder, please?" to ensure that everyone can hear the speaker and follow the discussion effectively.

GROUP 4: CHECKING & FEEDBACK

5. Two students write answers on the board. Others compare and check.
After students complete a pair-work activity, the teacher wants to make the correction process more interactive. The teacher points to the board and says: “Two students write the answers on the board. Others compare and check,” in order to involve students in peer review and allow them to identify similarities or differences in their responses.

6. Do you agree or disagree? Thumbs up for agreement, and thumbs down for disagreement
When a student expresses an opinion during a class discussion, the teacher wants to quickly assess the overall reaction of the class. Facing the students, the teacher says: “Do you agree or disagree? Thumbs up for agreement, and thumbs down for disagreement,” in order to engage all learners and encourage immediate participation from everyone.

7. Any other ideas?
When one student has already given an answer but the teacher wants to encourage more contributions from the class, the teacher pauses and looks around the room. Instead of moving on immediately, the teacher asks, “Any other ideas?” in order to invite additional responses and promote wider participation.

8. That’s correct/ Good job/ Well done.
When a student provides an accurate answer to a question, the teacher responds promptly to acknowledge it. The teacher nods and says: “That’s correct,Good job/ Well done.” in order to confirm the answer and reinforce the student’s understanding.

9. Almost right, but check again
When a student gives an answer that is close to being correct but still contains a small mistake, the teacher avoids saying it is completely wrong. Instead, the teacher says, “Almost right, but check again,” in order to encourage the student to rethink the answer and self-correct.

GROUP 4: CHECKING & FEEDBACK

10. “Can anyone help her/him?”

When a student is struggling to answer a question or seems unsure, the teacher decides to involve the rest of the class rather than immediately providing the correct answer. The teacher looks around and asks,“Can anyone help her/him?”, in order to invite peer support and promote collaborative learning.

GROUP 5: TRANSITION & CLOSING

1. Let's move on to the next activity.
After students have completed the current task and the teacher has finished checking the answers with the whole class, there are no further questions from the students. To transition to the next planned part of the lesson, the teacher says, "Let's move on to the next activity,"before giving instructions for the following task.

2. Now we're going to focus on speaking.
After all main activities have been completed and there are a few minutes left before the end of the lesson, the teacher gathers students' attention at the front of the class. To summarize key points and reinforce important content, the teacher says: "Let's review what we've learned today," before briefly going over the main vocabulary, grammar points, or skills practiced during the lesson.

3. Put your books away.
When the teacher is about to start a listening activity or a game that does not require textbooks, and some students still have their books open, the teacher says,"Put your books away," in order to remove distractions and ensure students are ready for the new task.

4. Look at the screen, please.
When the teacher displays a slide, a video, or instructions on the projector and notices that some students are still talking or looking elsewhere, the teacher says,"Look at the screen, please," in order to direct students' attention to the visual material.

5. Let's review what we've learned today.
At the end of the lesson, when most activities have been completed and there are a few minutes left, the teacher prepares to summarize the key points. The teacher says, "Let's review what we've learned today," in order to consolidate learning and reinforce important content before the class ends

GROUP 5: TRANSITION & CLOSING

6. Review the vocabulary at home.
After the teacher has introduced and practiced the new vocabulary in class, and after students have completed related exercises, the lesson is coming to an end. Before dismissing the class, the teacher says, “Review the vocabulary at home,”to remind students to reinforce the new words outside the classroom.

7. Don’t forget your homework.
After assigning homework and explaining the task requirements, and after checking that students understand what they need to do, the teacher prepares to end the lesson. The teacher then says, “Don’t forget your homework,” to ensure that students remember to complete the assigned task.

8. We’ll continue this part next time.
When there is not enough time to finish a particular activity, and after briefly summarizing what has been covered, the teacher says,“We’ll continue this part next time,” before moving on to closing the lesson.

9. That’s all for today
After reviewing the main points of the lesson and answering any final questions, the teacher signals the end of the class. The teacher says, “That’s all for today,” before allowing students to pack up their belongings.

10. Thank you for your attention.
After the lesson has officially ended and students stand up to say goodbye to the teacher, preparing to leave the classroom, the teacher responds by saying, “See you next lesson,” to return the farewell and close the class in a polite and friendly manner.

GROUP 6: CLASSROOM MANAGEMENT

1. Everyone, please quiet down.
When students begin talking to each other while the teacher is trying to give instructions, and the noise level increases, the teacher pauses and waits briefly. The teacher then says, “Everyone, please quiet down,” to regain control of the classroom before continuing the lesson.

2. I need your full attention now.
When the teacher is about to explain important instructions or introduce a new activity, and some students are still distracted, the teacher stops speaking momentarily. The teacher then says, “I need your full attention now,” to ensure that all students are focused before continuing.

3. Come on, I know you can do better.
When a student gives a very brief or incomplete answer, even though the teacher believes the student is capable of providing more detail, the teacher encourages further effort. The teacher says: “Come on, I know you can do better,”in order to motivate the student to expand or improve the response.

4. If no one raises your hand, I’ll randomly call someone.
When the teacher asks a question and the class remains silent, with no students volunteering to answer, the teacher waits for a few seconds. The teacher then says: “If no one raises your hand, I’ll randomly call someone,” to encourage students to participate voluntarily.

5. Are you talking about the lesson?
While students are working individually on a writing task, the classroom is expected to be quiet. The teacher notices two students whispering and occasionally looking at each other’s notebooks instead of focusing on their own work. The teacher walks over to their desks, pauses briefly, and asks, “Are you talking about the lesson?” to check whether their conversation is related to the assigned task and to subtly remind them to stay on task if it is not.

GROUP 6: CLASSROOM MANAGEMENT

6. One voice at a time, please.
During a whole-class discussion, several students become excited and start speaking at the same time. The teacher raises a hand slightly and waits for the noise to decrease. The teacher says: “One voice at a time, please,” to maintain order and allow each student to be heard clearly.

7. It’s okay to make mistakes.
When a student stops mid-sentence and says, “I’m not sure,” looking embarrassed, the classroom becomes quiet. The teacher smiles reassuringly and says, “It’s okay to make mistakes,” to reduce anxiety and encourage the student to continue speaking.

8. If you’ve finished, check your answers again or help your partner quietly.
During an individual writing task, the teacher gives students five minutes to complete the exercise. After a few minutes, several students at the front finish early and begin whispering to each other, while other students are still concentrating and writing. Noticing the increasing noise level and wanting to keep the classroom calm without interrupting those who are still working, the teacher walks toward the early finishers and says, “If you’ve finished, check your answers again or help your partner quietly,” encouraging them to stay engaged in the task while maintaining a quiet working environment for the rest of the class.

9. Take your seats. I need everyone ready in ten seconds.
After the break ends, several students are still standing outside the classroom door, while others are walking around, chatting, or sitting in the wrong seats. The noise level is high, and a few students have not taken out their books yet. The teacher stands at the front of the classroom, waits for a moment without speaking, and then says firmly, “Take your seats. I need everyone inside and ready in ten seconds,” while gesturing toward the classroom and scanning the room to ensure all students return to their proper places before the lesson resumes.

GROUP 6: CLASSROOM MANAGEMENT

10. Let’s be respectful. Everyone makes mistakes

During a whole-class speaking activity, the teacher invites a student to answer a question about the topic. The student begins speaking but mispronounces a key word, which causes a few classmates at the back to laugh quietly. The student immediately stops mid-sentence, looks down at their desk, and hesitates to continue. The teacher immediately intervenes and says: “Let’s be respectful. It’s okay to make mistakes,” to protect the student’s confidence and restore a supportive atmosphere
